

The Colorado Department of Education working in partnership with the Center for Assessment and Universal Mind has been honored as a finalist in the 2009 Adobe Max Awards for our work with Colorado SchoolView: Changing Conversations about Education through Data Visualization. The annual Adobe MAX Awards is a prestigious global awards program that recognizes the best uses of Adobe software for creating engaging experiences. The work is part of an ongoing multi-year partnership between the Center for Assessment, the Colorado Department of Education and Universal Mind associated with the development and use of the Colorado Growth Model.

The public can vote for SchoolView, one of three finalists in the education category beginning on Monday, Sept. 28 at <http://max.adobe.com/awards/>. Winners will be selected via online voting until Tuesday, Oct. 6., when the winners are announced live at the MAX event.
